FBI Agent Business Training FBI agents complete new agent training as part of the Bureau's core training course. Field training, including 20 weeks of training and more than 800 hours of training, has four main concentrations: academics, case drills, firearms training and operational skills. It examines a wide selection of subjects such as academic concentration, law, behavioral science, ethics and forensics. Students gain special skills in interviewing, writing reports, questioning and research. These courses prepare candidates to conduct criminal investigations and conduct counterintelligence and counterterrorism operations. The concentration of operational skills includes the hands-on work of the FBI, including surveillance, operational planning and tactical driving. Most of this experienced training takes place in the FBI's Hogan's Alley, an elaborate fake town that allows students to hon their skills with simulated exercises. The bureau encourages applicants to show evidence of these soft skills on their resumes. Along with general soft skills, the unique nature of the FBI business requires some other special skills. For example, proficiency in a language other than English can be very valuable, especially for agents interested in counterterrorism and counterintelligence studies. Fluency in languages such as Chinese, Russian and Arabic can be especially useful for FBI agents. The FBI investigates many types of crimes, and the agency searches for candidates with special skills and work experience in areas that may be useful for investigations. For example, candidates with strong IT skills can run to investigate cybercrime. The FBI also recognizes military and law enforcement training value, and many agents emerge from these agencies. Some positions, such as the FBI's Hostage Rescue Team, require at least three years of military or law enforcement experience. Ad CriminalJusticeDegreeSchools.com an ad-supported site.
